Hospital at the University of Munich

Renovation and restoration of optional service stations

The hospital at the University of Munich is one of the largest and best-known university clinics in Germany. It provides top-level teaching, research, medical treatment and care. In addition to its many domestic patients, numerous international patients also receive treatment at the University of Munich's hospital. In order to meet the high standards for inpatient wards as well, eight of the existing optional service stations were completely gutted. Their structural and technical infrastructure was completely replaced, and they were freshly renovated with high-quality fixtures and fittings. Our services included all of the architectural and design work as well as project management tasks.
